Le Conseil d'administration considère que le Fonds a bien observé les principes de ce Code, à tous les égards importants, au cours de cet exercice financier.

Commentaire annuel sur les marchés financiers

États-Unis

Le troisième trimestre 2021 a été marqué par le ralentissement de la reprise économique américaine, la hausse des taux d'intérêt et la chute du revenu réel des ménages sur fond d'inflation élevée. Les principaux indicateurs économiques (ISM) ont dénoté une croissance continue de l'activité, mais à un rythme nettement moins soutenu, tandis que les indicateurs de confiance des ménages sont restés très médiocres. Les chiffres pour le secteur immobilier, notamment sensible aux taux d'intérêt, étaient particulièrement décourageants. D'un autre côté, la création d'emploi est restée robuste, le taux de chômage faible, et le marché du travail a vu le retour de nombreux travailleurs qui avaient renoncé à chercher un emploi pendant la pandémie. L'inflation a augmenté légèrement en juillet et en août par rapport au mois de juin, mais elle est restée accrochée à un niveau très élevé (l'inflation de base est repartie à la hausse en août). La banque centrale américaine (Fed) a poursuivi son resserrement monétaire (deux relèvements de 0,75 % des taux des Fed Funds en juillet et septembre) et a clairement fait part de son intention de prioriser les mesures de lutte contre l'inflation, dût-il y avoir des conséquences négatives sur le marché du travail.

Au quatrième trimestre, l'activité économique américaine a connu un nouveau coup d'accélérateur, après le coup de mou de la fin du troisième trimestre. Les chiffres et les enquêtes économiques mensuels ont confirmé la dynamique positive dans le secteur privé, les sociétés industrielles et des services annonçant une nette embellie du climat économique. Ceci étant, les volumes de production ont continué de pâtir d'importantes difficultés dans les chaînes d'approvisionnement et de la pénurie de produits semi-finis, en dépit de certains signes d'amélioration au quatrième trimestre. Les ventes de détail ont enflé de 0,3 % en novembre, après une augmentation de 1,7 % en octobre, tandis que la production industrielle s'est arrogé 0,5 %. Le taux de chômage s'est établi à 4,2 % en novembre, en baisse par rapport aux 4,6 % du mois d'octobre, le marché du travail poursuivant sur la voie de l'amélioration. L'inflation s'est accélérée en novembre, pour s'établir à 6,8 % en glissement annuel, portée par des effets de base et par des facteurs temporaires, mais aussi par des causes plus structurelles. Jerome Powell a été reconduit pour un second mandat à la tête de la Fed. En décembre, la Federal Reserve a annoncé qu'elle allait doubler le rythme de réduction de ses achats d'actifs en janvier, pour le ramener à 30 milliards USD par mois, les achats nets devant se terminer en mars.

Au début du premier trimestre 2022, les chiffres économiques dénotaient un ralentissement de l'activité et de la mobilité en janvier, en raison de la propagation du variant Omicron. Mais la situation s'est améliorée à partir de février. Les indicateurs de confiance des entreprises ont suivi la même tendance, malgré des indicateurs dans l'industrie pointant vers un ralentissement, tandis que le marché du travail américain a continué de se renforcer. En dépit d'un début de résolution des goulots d'étranglement au niveau du commerce mondial, la pression haussière sur les prix est demeurée forte en raison d'importants déséquilibres entre l'offre et la demande. Les enquêtes sur la confiance des consommateurs (comme celle du Conference Board) ont mis en lumière certains problèmes à propos de la situation économique future, en raison sans doute de l'envolée des prix de l'énergie et de la guerre en Ukraine. L'augmentation notable des attentes des ménages en termes d'inflation s'est reflétée dans l'accélération de l'indice des prix à la consommation, qui était très proche des 8 % en glissement annuel en février.

Au deuxième trimestre 2022, l'économie américaine a ralenti, en témoignant alors la détérioration de la confiance des consommateurs et l'inflation persistante (affectant le revenu disponible), tirée par les coûts élevés de l'énergie et des services. L'inflation des prix à la consommation la plus récente pour le mois de mai a atteint son plus haut niveau depuis quarante ans, maintenant la pression sur la Fed pour qu'elle offre une réponse à un problème devenu politique dans le pays, les élections de mi-mandat attendant le président Joe Biden cette année. La Fed a relevé ses taux directeurs de 75 points de base en juin et allait sans doute rester sur la trajectoire du resserrement à court terme. Les pressions ont néanmoins continué de s'accumuler sur la croissance économique américaine, tandis que le PMI manufacturier de juin était en berne. Résultat : la tâche de la Fed s'annonçait difficile à la lumière de sa double mission de trouver un équilibre entre stabilité des prix et croissance économique. Ceci dit, la robustesse des marchés du travail et la faiblesse des taux de chômage signifient que la consommation globale était vigoureuse.

Zone euro

Dans la zone euro, l'environnement économique s'est détérioré notablement au troisième trimestre 2021. L'économie de la zone euro, déjà en proie à une inflation record, à un resserrement monétaire et aux retombées du ralentissement en Chine, a en plus dû faire face à une envolée des prix du gaz naturel consécutive à la réduction drastique des approvisionnements russes. Les craintes d'une récession dans la zone euro sont apparues à la fin du trimestre, sur fond de crise énergétique. Les indicateurs de confiance des entreprises ont fait une légère incursion en territoire négatif, tandis que les indicateurs de confiance des ménages, qui étaient déjà à des niveaux planchers, ont continué de baisser. De l'autre côté, le marché du travail est resté actif, le taux de chômage étant à son niveau le plus bas depuis la création de la zone euro. La hausse de l'inflation a atteint les 10 % en septembre 2021. Après avoir relevé ses taux directeurs de 0,50 % en juillet (la première augmentation depuis 2011), la Banque centrale européenne (BCE) les a de nouveau relevés en septembre, de 0,75 %. La BCE a fait part de son intention de poursuivre ce cycle haussier pour combattre l'inflation, malgré la dégradation des prévisions de croissance.

L'activité économique a décéléré dans la zone euro à la fin du quatrième trimestre, comme l'ont confirmé les chiffres et les enquêtes économiques mensuels, en raison de l'explosion des cas de COVID-19. Les problèmes de la chaîne d'approvisionnement ont continué de peser lourdement sur la production industrielle, qui pâtit des pénuries de produits semi-finis et d'une forte pression à la hausse sur les prix. Toutefois, des signes d'un possible soulagement sont apparus au cours du quatrième trimestre dans la zone euro. Les ventes de détail étaient en hausse de 0,2 % en octobre (+1,4 % en glissement annuel), tandis que la production industrielle a enflé de 1,1 % (+3,3 % en glissement annuel). Le marché du travail a poursuivi sa progression au quatrième trimestre, avec un recul du taux de chômage à 7,3 % en octobre, en baisse par rapport aux 7,4 % du mois de septembre. L'inflation s'est accélérée pour atteindre 4,9 % en novembre en raison d'effets de base, de graves problèmes au niveau du commerce international, d'un rebond de la demande et d'une forte contribution à la hausse des prix de l'énergie. La BCE a annoncé une réduction majeure de ses achats : elle va poursuivre son programme d'achats d'urgence face à la pandémie au premier trimestre de 2022 « à un rythme moins soutenu qu'au trimestre précédent », pour le terminer en mars 2022, tout en réduisant alors graduellement aussi son programme d'achat d'actifs.

Les chiffres du PIB de la zone euro publiés fin janvier ont montré un net ralentissement de la croissance économique dans la zone euro au quatrième trimestre 2021 : le PIB allemand s'est contracté, tandis que le PIB en France, en Espagne et en Italie a augmenté nettement moins qu'au troisième trimestre. Les chiffres pour le premier trimestre 2022 dénotaient une poursuite du ralentissement de l'activité au tout début de l'année, en raison de la propagation du variant Omicron. Ceci dit, à partir de la mi-janvier, les enquêtes relatives à l'économie et à la consommation, et les données de mobilité ont fait montre d'une nette amélioration. Les indices PMI montraient que les Services, en particulier, avaient souffert en janvier, avant de rebondir en février, tandis que le secteur industriel était plus robuste. Mais le mois de mars a été le théâtre d'une nouvelle dégradation en raison de la guerre en Ukraine : le PMI manufacturier a chuté à un niveau bas inédit en quatorze mois, s'affichant à 56,5. Le marché du travail a continué de s'améliorer mais le problème de l'inflation devenait de plus en plus pesant pour les ménages, l'indice des prix à la consommation atteignant de nouveaux sommets sur fond de hausse continue des prix de l'énergie. La flambée des prix des matières premières et les sanctions infligées en raison de la guerre en Ukraine ont renforcé considérablement le risque de stagflation dans la zone euro, où la récession et une inflation prolongée au-dessus des 5 % faisaient partie des scénarios possibles.

Au deuxième trimestre 2022, les craintes de stagflation se sont renforcées dans la zone euro, après l'augmentation des prix et la pression apparue sur les prévisions de croissance, qu'ont aggravé les tensions géopolitiques et la décision de la Russie de couper le robinet du gaz. Tandis que les leaders mondiaux discutaient et cherchaient à savoir comment se détourner du gaz russe à long terme et renforcer leurs lignes de défense en Europe orientale, les ramifications à court terme sont devenues apparentes. Alors que le dernier indice composite PMI de la zone euro s'est affiché à son plus bas en plus d'un an, les prix à la consommation ont augmenté de 8,6 % (en glissement annuel) en juin. Les effets de cette diminution du pouvoir d'achat se sont également ressentis dans la politique française. Le président Macron a perdu sa majorité après le second tour des élections. D'un autre côté, la tâche de la BCE commençait à se compliquer dans la mesure où elle tentait de trouver un équilibre entre la maîtrise de l'inflation (partiellement causée par les problèmes du côté de l'approvisionnement) et l'évitement d'une fragmentation au sein de l'UE. Pour terminer, la BCE a décidé de mettre un terme à ses achats nets d'actifs liés à son programme d'achats d'actifs et de créer un nouvel outil anti-fragmentation.

Marchés émergents

En Chine, alors que la croissance économique était atone au deuxième trimestre 2021 en raison des restrictions liées à la COVID, elle a commencé à se reprendre durant l'été 2021, grâce au relâchement des mesures visant à contenir la pandémie, et à l'assouplissement de la politique monétaire et fiscale. Ceci étant, les autorités chinoises ont annoncé de nouvelles restrictions de déplacement devant le Congrès du Parti à la mi-octobre. Dans l'ensemble, pour le reste des marchés émergents, ce troisième trimestre 2021 a été marqué par des révisions à la baisse des prévisions de croissance. Cela s'est joué sur fond des éléments suivants : i) inflation élevée et resserrement des conditions monétaires mondiales et locales, qui affectent de plus en plus la demande nationale, ii) un ralentissement du commerce mondial, ainsi que iii) des prévisions de récession dans la zone euro et une croissance plus faible que prévu aux États-Unis. En raison de la crise énergétique européenne et de l'augmentation des prix, le ralentissement économique semblait plus prononcé en Europe centrale et orientale qu'en Amérique latine. La situation économique en Asie est restée stable. D'un autre côté, les chiffres de l'inflation étaient très élevés et augmentaient partout, malgré un certain niveau de stabilisation ou de diminution dans certains pays, comme le Brésil. Sans surprise, les banques centrales des pays émergents ont continué à augmenter les taux d'intérêt (excepté pour la Russie et la Turquie), tandis que les retardataires ont finalement rejoint la tendance (Thaïlande, Indonésie, etc.). Tandis que les perspectives d'augmentation des taux d'intérêt grandissaient en Asie, le cycle était peut-être atteint dans d'autres pays émergents (Brésil, Hongrie, République tchèque, etc.). Ceci étant, l'inflation était toujours accrochée à des niveaux à deux chiffres en République tchèque et en Hongrie. Les prévisions pour les économies émergentes ont continué à se détériorer au quatrième trimestre 2021 et au premier trimestre 2022, même si le fossé avec les économies avancées est resté favorable aux premières. L'économie chinoise, pénalisée par les contraintes politiques imposées au début du quatrième trimestre, s'est redressée légèrement. Les décideurs politiques chinois ont créé la surprise à la fin de l'année en restaurant une politique monétaire largement accommodante (par le biais d'une diminution des ratios de réserves obligatoires de 50 points de base). Ils ont également indiqué que la stabilité de la croissance par la baisse de la demande nationale serait la priorité de leur politique en 2022. En ce qui concerne l'inflation, à l'exception de l'Asie où les pressions inflationnistes ont été contenues, les chiffres de l'inflation suraient toujours sur des niveaux élevés, bien au-dessus des objectifs de la banque centrale dans certains pays, contraignant les banques centrales à poursuivre ou à amplifier leur politique monétaire stricte. La flambée des prix de l'énergie, du pétrole et des produits alimentaires, et les problèmes de la chaîne d'approvisionnement, sont restés la principale cause de ces niveaux élevés de l'inflation. Des facteurs nationaux ont également alimenté ces pressions inflationnistes : l'augmentation des prix de l'immobilier et des salaires, la dépréciation de la monnaie, etc. Le climat est devenu plus incertain à la fin de la période en raison de la propagation rapide du variant Omicron. Certains pays ont de nouveau introduit des mesures sanitaires réduisant la mobilité des personnes. Au deuxième trimestre 2022, les marchés émergents ont affiché un environnement économique divergent, marqué avant toutes choses par l'inflation et les politiques de la banque centrale. En Chine, la politique de tolérance zéro COVID du gouvernement a affecté l'activité économique de manière négative. Résultat : la banque centrale chinoise a abaissé son taux directeur en mai afin de soutenir la croissance. Tandis que le PMI manufacturier était vigoureux en juin, les prévisions de croissance en Chine étaient toujours freinées par les politiques anti-Covid. D'un autre côté, la Banque de réserve de l'Inde a relevé son taux directeur de 50 points de base en juin afin de contrôler l'inflation. Ailleurs, les exportateurs latino-américains ont profité de la hausse des prix des matières premières mais ont continué de faire face à une inflation persistante. Au Brésil, en plus du resserrement monétaire, les autorités ont mis en place un soutien fiscal pour compenser l'impact des prix élevés. La situation géopolitique et l'invasion de l'Ukraine par la Russie ont continué d'affecter le coût des produits alimentaires et des matières premières dans les pays d'Europe orientale. Dans le même temps, la banque centrale russe a réduit ses taux à de nombreuses reprises pour sauver l'économie russe, ébranlée par les sanctions occidentales. En Turquie, par contre, les dirigeants politiques ont juré qu'ils poursuivraient leurs politiques peu orthodoxes afin de maîtriser les prix.
